

To Change or not to Change

CHS students communicate the highs and lows when changing into a new year.

Oh, boy! A new year means that most of everything around school is changing and you can't do much about it. Most of CHS handles change differently from each other, depending on their situation, when trying to adjust to it. Shawn Szakelyhidi, history teacher, states, "Change is inevitable, so you can't run from it". That is one of many possible, positive ways on how you could view it.

Szakelyhidi, also says, "I embrace it," when his school environment seems to switch up on him. Along with Sam Britt ('19) saying, "I try to make those changes as positive as I can." Together, both of these are great opinionated ideas on what to do when you see change coming your way.

Those ideas can also be used if you see the situation the same as Amanda Allison-Cook ('17) who thinks of new changes as, "unexpected". Or you can agree with Chyna Williams ('19) when she described them as "annoying". It is hard for people to get used to the fact that change is around you. But personally, change in general is a circumstance that you all deal with at different times, and you can figure out your own best way to make it bearable for yourself.
